

Local Builder's Negligence is Responsible for Unsafe and Inaccessible Living Conditions Affecting Seniors and Residents with Disabilities

On May 15, a news conference was held to announce a joint lawsuit filed by The Fair Housing Center, The Ability Center, and Brooklynn Park resident Jenny Tillman alleging that Brooklynn Park Villas, a 55+ housing community in Toledo, Ohio, was falsely marketed as accessible but exhibits glaring violations of The Fair Housing Act. The lawsuit accuses Moline Builders, Inc., JLJ Development, Inc., Larry L. Fast, and James Moline of discriminating against persons with disabilities by failing to comply with federal design and construction regulations for accessible housing. With negligence and reckless indifference, the property's builders continued to violate the law even after being fully informed of their lack of compliance.

"Having lived with MS for 25 years, I bought my home thinking about my future. After moving in and living in my home, it became clear it was not accessible to me or others in this community," stated Ms. Tillman, Brooklynn Park resident. "The step at my front door can be difficult for me, so often I can't even use my main entrance and have to enter the house through the garage. I asked the builder many times to make changes to make it accessible but I was told, 'You bought it this way.' I intended for this home to be my last home for this last chapter of my life, but instead I was taken advantage of."

"Nearly half of fair housing cases are based on disability discrimination and we have a large aging population," stated Michael Marsh, President and CEO of The Fair Housing Center. "Accessible housing is vital to create a diverse and inclusive community where people with disabilities feel welcome and have the opportunity to thrive."

Many homes contain steps leading into the front entrance.

During an extensive investigation at Brooklynn Park, The Fair Housing Center and The Ability Center discovered numerous violations of accessibility requirements, both in individual units and in common use areas. For example, many entrances contain steps; walkways are impassable due to steep slopes or lack of curb cuts; environmental controls, mailboxes, and other amenities are located out of reach; and kitchens and bathrooms do not provide sufficient clear floor space to be usable by persons with disabilities.

"When developers fail to comply with the minimal access standards set by federal law, people with disabilities are often forced to choose between unsafe, inaccessible housing and segregated, institutional settings," stated Katherine Hunt Thomas, Attorney for The Ability Center.

The Fair Housing Center's attempts to establish a cooperative relationship with Moline Builders were dismissed. During a meeting in June 2016, Moline Builders was made explicitly aware of the ways Brooklynn Park did not comply with fair housing regulations, and The Fair Housing Center provided suggestions for modifications that would bring the properties into compliance. Despite having full knowledge of the violations, Moline Builders proceeded to build additional units at Brooklynn Park that exhibited the same accessibility obstacles. "If we don't hold them accountable, it gives a green light for other builders to ignore the law," Michael Marsh asserted.

The lawsuit demands that Moline Builders and JLJ Development retrofit all their properties to make them accessible and seeks damages to compensate victims for their losses and deter future discriminatory conduct.

YOUR ZIP CODE MATTERS. IT'S NOT JUST AN ADDRESS, IT'S AN IDENTITY.

The third annual Ode to the Zip Code poetry contest wrapped up on 419 Day with a live reading at the Main Library. Judges narrowed the pool of 250 entries received, and the finalists were invited to read their poems and compete for cash prizes. A new youth category added this year gave special recognition to the voices of our younger generation.

The contest is a partnership of The Fair Housing Center, the Arts Commission, Toledo Lucas County Public Library, and Toledo City Paper. Participants are asked to submit short poems inspired by their ZIP Code, where the number of words in each line of the poem is determined by the corresponding digit in their ZIP Code. Inspiration for the contest came from the O, Miami Poetry Festival and WLRN-Miami Herald News, the originators of the “zip ode” concept.

April is both National Poetry Month and Fair Housing Month, creating the perfect opportunity to engage our community in a project that highlights the ways our lives are shaped by where we live.

ProMedica Says “I’m In!”

We were honored to be selected by ProMedica Foundation for their Impact and Inspire Event Series for Young Professionals (“I’m In”) on April 5 at The Blarney Event Center.

More than 100 young professionals attended this casual networking event to learn more about how The Fair Housing Center strengthens their community and make a direct impact by donating keys for a public art project.

Michael Marsh, President and CEO of The Fair Housing Center, delivered an inspiring presentation that explained how the neighborhood where we live affects our health and well-being. “People who live in high opportunity areas tend to have access to better education, jobs, and healthcare, while those who live in underserved areas make less money, have shorter lifespans, and are more likely to suffer from substance abuse, disease, and higher incarceration rates during their lifetimes,” stated Marsh. “By identifying and addressing these disparities, fair housing helps to build more diverse, vibrant communities, where everyone has the chance to reach their potential.”

unique way. Partnering with The Fair Housing Center is an exciting opportunity for our guests to contribute to public art while learning how housing affects an individual’s health and well-being,” said Allison Murawski, senior marketing specialist, ProMedica Foundations.

“I’m In” also featured the launch of our community-wide key collection. The Fair Housing Center is collecting thousands of keys (new and old) across the community to construct a unique outdoor sculpture designed and created, in-kind, by Toledo Twisted Iron. Artist and owner Dane Turpening unveiled sketches of the “Keys to Opportunity” sculpture at the event.

WHO WE ARE

Get to know some of the passionate people who help us keep housing fair!

GETTING TO KNOW Donor Geri Yoder

Originally born and raised in Hawaii, Geri grew up surrounded by many cultures in a welcoming and inclusive environment. It wasn't until moving to Louisiana at age 15 that she first witnessed the devastating effects of discrimination. Believing that people should be treated equally, Geri says that in her ideal world, "there would be no barriers or fences."

Geri's upbringing in a loving and hard-working family also fostered her sense of generosity. Helping others was second nature and, "many times our family took in other families." Her grandparents played a special role in her life, serving as examples of how to be giving, caring, and loving, even when times were difficult. It's a lesson that has stuck with her through the years, and while she feels fortunate and blessed today she says, "I don't really want it if I can't share it. No one is ever too good to put out a helping hand to someone else."

Geris Motto

"Be humble, be accepting, have compassion for those who aren't as fortunate as you."

It's this passion for equality and helping others that drives Geri to support the work of The Fair Housing Center. Hearing from former clients who shared their personal stories, she was saddened that people have to go through such experiences, but grateful to know that The Fair Housing Center is there to help ensure it doesn't happen to anyone else. "I believe what they do and stand for is very important to our community. I taught my children to have giving hearts, and if they have the resources to help someone, they step up to the plate. This is the same philosophy I see in The Fair Housing Center."

GETTING TO KNOW Board Member Cherie Sears

In addition to serving on the Board for the last two years, Cherie currently chairs the Development and Outreach Committee. Her interest in civil rights developed while working in the lending industry, where she saw firsthand the need within our community.

She names Abraham Lincoln as her favorite social movement leader, stating, "I have been fascinated by him since I was a kid." She draws inspiration from people around her who faced difficult situations and instead of giving up, they "kept working to make their life a success."

If she had the option to trade places with anyone for a week, Cherie would choose the singer-songwriter Pink, admiring not only her voice, but also who she is as a person. "I have never been able to carry a tune but I love to sing! I was the only kid in fourth grade to not make the cut for choir!"

Cherie's Favorite Quote

"Life is like a coin; you can spend it any way you wish, but you can only spend it once." – Lillian Dickson

To anyone considering a career in nonprofit or civil rights, Cherie would encourage their decision by telling them, "There are so many people needing help in our communities," and for those who are willing to put in the hard work, "you will reap the rewards!"
